NFL Week 3 of the 2025 season brings another exciting slate of matchups, with fans eager to catch every moment of the action. Fortunately, there are multiple ways to stream or watch live on TV, depending on your location and preferred platform.

In the United States, the majority of Sunday afternoon games will air on CBS and FOX, including high-profile matchups such as the Green Bay Packers vs. Cleveland Browns and Los Angeles Rams vs. Philadelphia Eagles. These games can also be streamed through live TV providers like Hulu + Live TV, YouTube TV, and Fubo, all of which include local network access.

For prime-time coverage, NBC will broadcast Sunday Night Football featuring the Kansas City Chiefs vs. New York Giants, while ESPN and ABC carry Monday Night Football with the Detroit Lions taking on the Baltimore Ravens. Fans without cable can stream these via Peacock (NBC) or the ESPN app with a valid provider login.

The NFL's own service, NFL+, provides mobile streaming of live local and prime-time games, along with replays and exclusive content. Premium subscribers also get access to NFL RedZone, delivering every touchdown from Sunday afternoon games.

International fans can tune in through NFL Game Pass International on DAZN, while Australian viewers can enjoy free live coverage on 7mate and 7plus.

With so many options available, NFL Week 3 can be experienced live on TV or streamed across multiple platforms, ensuring fans never miss a play.
